Full description

Mount Llaima rises to 3,125 meters in Conguillío National Park. We set out from Melipeuco at 4 a.m. to climb its slopes of snow and volcanic rock equipped with crampons, an ice axe, and a helmet, while the guide recounts the geological history of this giant in the Kutralkura Geopark.

From the summit, the view is 360°: more than 11 volcanoes, part of Argentina, and almost the entire region. It's a demanding climb, taking about 16 hours in total, suitable for people in good physical condition and ages 17 and older. The main season runs from October to April, depending on conditions.

What's included
