Full description

Amantani island is located 40 Km (25 miles) away from the city of Puno (3 hours of navigation in normal boat). Because of its more distant location, tourism on the island of Amantani has not developed in the same way as on Taquile. The main difference is that home-stays have remained a more authentic cultural experience in Amantani

The 4,300 inhabitants of Amantani are of Quechua origin and they are mainly small farmers. The most important crops in Amantani are Andean potatoes, barley and green beans. The "Amantaneños" have not been as successful in their entrepreneurial tourism initiatives as their neighbors from Taquile. However, they are very friendly and warm hosts and offer a great homestay experience to travelers.

A visit to Amantani necessarily implies to stay one night on the island. The houses are simple and services are basic. There is no running water in many of the houses and toilets are basic. There are no showers. For many people this home stay experience and the encounter with the host family is a revelation of the reality of Andean people at such altitude. This cultural exchange experience in Amantani is very touching and fascinating.
